For relaxation, I do far more listening than reading, making the Kindle Paperwhite a downgrade from just using the Kindle app on my phone. The more eye-friendly display doesn't make up for the less ear-friendly audio. Even the display doesn't live up to the hype. While it doesn't get washed out by bright light, it's far from glare-free.

Paperwhite has a built in light, which makes the pages white in colour as compared to Kindle's off white pages. This makes reading that more pleasurable. At night, a Paperwhite is uniformly lit, while a Kindle with a light cover has a single source of lighting at the top, which makes it non uniform, and by the time you reach the end of the page, the light is almost useless.
