Mapping The Edge Sarah Dunant

Sarah Dunant can write, of that there is no doubt, in fact I really like her style, but her storylines just seem to frustrate me. Mapping the Edge has three viewpoints or storylines going on all at once which come to a simultaneous time point at the end, however it just didn't work for me at all reading it as

Mapping the Edge by Sarah Dunant - Goodreads

'Mapping the Edge' is original, surprising, and gripping, a page-turner demanding that you keep up with its twists and turns. Like the film 'Sliding Doors' she offers alternate scenarios for her central character, the enigmatic Anna, but with technical prowess and her experienced pen, Sarah Dunant creates a much more subtle, complex story of a troubled and dissatisfied contemporary woman.

Sarah Dunant's writing has never been more edgy, more tantalising. She never shirks implications, never states the obvious. A novel of our time, unpredictable and tantalising, 'Mapping the Edge' uses standard contemporary romance tropes - Anna flying to meet her lover in Florence, the Gothic ghostly alternative story, mail-order dating - but ...

Mapping the Edge (A Novel): Dunant, Sarah: Amazon.com: Books

Mapping the Edge ebook reviews: Definately NOT like BIRTH OF VENUS—really interesting writing idea, but not executed very well. Sarah Dunant is a great writer in how she develops each scene so you can see it like you were there, but I definately don't like her as a mystery/thriller author.
